A FAST MILE BY RATIO.

CHARLOTTE, Mich., July 21.—[Special.]—Mr. Adam Bonner went to town this morning and at once went to the Fairgrounds driving park, where Ratio 2, and Wilbur Bell were waiting for him. The horses were ready, and after a warming-up mile in 2:40, was put to a fast trot. The mile was made in two very fast heats, the first in 2:17, and the second was done in 2:17¼, the last quarter in 33 seconds. Mr. Bonner was pleased with the time, and thought that if right before the trip from Buffalo, Ratio could have trained, they could have made 2:15 or better. He will be ready to start at the Fair Grounds, Detroit, next week, and will be there to do it." Ratio will take Grand Rapids next week.

BRIGHTON BEACH.

NEW YORK, July 21.—The attendance at Brighton Beach was about 8,000 to-day. The track was in good condition, and the time made was good. The feature was the contest of the day, and it is to be hoped by lovers of fast speed, whatever may be said against the race, it was one of the most exciting ever seen on a sulky track. The race was a 2:22 class trotting, for a purse of $1,000, given by the Fleetwing Trotting Association, and was won by Mr. Wilkinson's handsome bay mare Fleetwing. Fleetwing has never been beaten in a race, and is a favorite with the public. Time, 2:20¼, 2:21¼, 2:21¼. The 2:18 class pacing race, for a purse of $1,000, was also a fine event. SIX CHILDREN CREMATED.

The Residence of Josiah M. Brown Destroyed by Fire Near Gettysburg, Pa.

Maybe the Drunken Father's Efforts to Rescue His Children Perish in the Flames.

A $10,000 Fire in New York—Fames in the Adam Express Co. Feed Oil Loss and Elsewhere.

Gettysburg, Pa., June 21.—Last night about 11 o'clock the residence of Josiah M. Brown, a small township boy but three miles from Gettysburg, Cumberland County, was destroyed by fire, and six of his children, ranging in age from 4 to 13 years, were cremated. Brown was awakened by strange noises, and, under the impression that burglars were about, took his gun and went outside to investigate. To his horror, he discovered the building in flames. He quickly gave the alarm, but before he could reach his six children, who were sleeping on the second floor, the roof fell in and a few minutes later nothing was left of the house but a heap of ashes. His wife and three younger children escaping on the lower floor were taken out safely, but the previous week Josiah had sent his other children across the Potomac.

This morning news of the horrible calamity spread rapidly throughout the county and hundreds of people soon came to the scene. The weighty events of the last of the children, charred and unrecognizable, were gathered up and buried in one coffin. The other two were supposed to have perished in the flames, as no trace of their remains could be found. The parents are crushed with grief, and the whole community is rendered sad over the terrible fate that has befallen their neighbors. The father claims that the fire was the work of an incendiary, and to this opinion others assent.

Edmund Gosse's Collection of the Works of Thomas Gray in Prose and Verse.

A Troubled Heart—Saskia's Presence of England—The Philosophy of Disobedience.

Studies in Humor—Literary Landmarks of London—Our Magyar—Religious Periodicals.

May 30 of the present year the bust of Thomas Gray was unveiled at Pembroke College, Cambridge, Eng.—exactly 114 years after his death. The university has signalized its meeting a record of interest in one of the sweetest figures among the illustrations of the eighteenth century. Among those who assembled at the Alma Mater of Spenser, Milton, and Tennyson on this occasion was Dr. Edmund Gosse, from whom we owe the first more to restore the fame of Gray from the timid associate of his own time until the recent publication of travels on the other. His life of the author of "Elegy," in the "English Men of Letters" series, may be regarded as a portrait to his admirable collection in four volumes of "The Works of Thomas Gray in Prose and Verse." In his editorial duty he has brought sound judgment and scholarly taste, quickened by a rare spirit of industry, which has rendered a most grateful to the merchant to a proper field of literary endeavor. The results of his study and research bear this testimony. "Dr. Edmund Gosse is delineator this day complete outline of a poet whose no one has judged with a fear or more generous discrimination than he."

In the preface Mr. Gosse modestly acknowledges that he has been disappointed in not discovery of Gray, the successor of which tradition has often hinted at, but which does not be regarded as autograph of the complete text. The poorer score which the author's own critical taste has but very few pages of his early work, and it will hardly be a question of regret that Mr. Gosse has failed to add materially to the latter number, which comprise little more than a mere of antiquarian interest for students. His failure to rich re-appear will in no way detract from the service he has rendered the critical literature of this age. He was fully conscious of the indispensable duty of Editor, and his work will supersede those in the libraries of the future. Gosse and Gray to, him, also, for carrying forward to a fruition almost wholly lost. With a few hints, and slender germs that have scarcely encouraged even Professors, but the Gray of English poetry out of the material accessible only Mason and Mitford the first time.

Thomas Gray was born in 1716, at a time when Pope and Swift were nearing the close of their careers, and when Richardson and Fielding were beginning. He was the son of a London scrivener, who, after being a merchant and money-lender, retired to Cornhill, and married Dorothy Antrobus, who bore him twelve children, of whom only four survived infancy. Thomas lived to a ripe and mellow age, and was a study of complex elements. In society and in letters there was a rich, sweet sense, preventing the charm of the finest. Sometimes there was a temperate fire and of discontent to threaten and to scorch. Of a time when there was and was unsurpassed in the perfection of conversation, and when Wordsworth's dwelling of poetry as "the commonplace considering of poetry" was in full growth, the elegiac poet was in the front rank of the brilliant talkers of the day. Gray lived in a time which, while it possessed the rarest gems of the past, was content to wear the paste imitations of the present. Gray lived in a time which, while possessing the highest appreciation of the poetry of the past, was content to wear the paste imitations of the present. BLAINE'S BOY.

Sally Aylesford's Last Child Practically Abandoned to Its Unfortunate.

Her Existence in Paris Where She Was Known Only as "Mrs. Spencer."

Lord Stanford's Letters to a Physician—The Pressure of the Duty Admitted in Writing.

London Standard, July 5: The Aylesford Divorce case engaged the attention for [illegible] at the Court of Queen's bench yesterday.

The suit of the petitioner, the Hon. Charles Coplestone Bampfylde, brother of the late Earl, who claims the Peerage, was again proceeded with.

Sergeant Ballantine, Lady's counsel in the Courtenay of Aylesford (on the last two years, with the exception of Lord Aylesford going to India and the Caledonian having Washington Hall. While the Countess was living in London, Paris, and Wales she was married to Lord Stanford. They lived together in the same hotel in Paris as Mr. and Mrs. Spencer. When Lady Aylesford died in Portugal about the time stated her. While there she corresponded of Lord Aylesford stating the Countess, on her large wedding of her. She remained there three of the court in Paris, and the being left with the seven there, as he was there, when Lord Aylesford left for India to [illegible] to see the Countess at Paris. Whilst she was there Lord Aylesford came to Paris, and [illegible] Lord Aylesford went to Portugal for the purpose of [illegible] the Countess. Lord Aylesford died in Portugal [illegible] 1885, the child was born. Lord Stanford died a few days afterwards. Witness took the child to be registered with Dr. Barnes. Lord Aylesford continued in Paris a month, receiving no Portugal about Dec. 6. Lady Aylesford was here living at Paris. From the end of 1885 witness had seen Lord Stanford frequently, and also at Paris, but she had not seen him within the last three months.

CO-RESPONDENT'S EVIDENCE.

Dr. Barnes, of Paris, said he was called to attend the Countess, who was then known as Mrs. Spencer. He received a communication from Lord Stanford asking him to attend the case. He accordingly attended the Countess from time to time. He knew Lord Stanford then by the name of Lord Stanford. He saw Lord Aylesford [illegible] Lord Stanford before and after the elderly lady. It was arranged that the child should be registered as a child whose birth it was desired to have concealed—that is to say, as the legitimate child, as the son of a lady who was married. He was present at the registration. The French law required that in such a case the mother should be present, and that the father should be represented. Lady Aylesford wished to secure the interests of her child, and therefore desired that Lord Stanford should be represented. Lord Stanford wished to secure his interests, and also thought it should be represented, to insure the child by some one else in Paris. Lord Stanford gave his friend, Sherrard Owen, power to act for him. Witness knew Lord Stanford was dead. He knew Lord Aylesford was dead. He knew Lord Aylesford wished to secure the interests of the child. Lord Aylesford never accepted Owen to see the child in Paris.

Cross-examined—Lady Aylesford told him to go to a doctor in Paris, who gave her the doctor's address. [illegible]

Witness believed a letter might also [illegible] Lord Stanford would call to [illegible] Owen, [illegible] Lord Aylesford [illegible] Lady Aylesford. The object of [illegible] Lord Aylesford wished to Paris a month, receiving no Portugal about Dec. 6. Lady Aylesford was here living at Paris. From the end of 1885 witness had seen Lord Stanford frequently, and also at Paris, but she had not seen him within the last three months.

CO-RESPONDENT'S EVIDENCE.

Dr. Barnes, of Paris, said he was called to attend the Countess, who was then known as Mrs. Spencer. He received a communication from Lord Stanford asking him to attend the case. He accordingly attended the Countess from time to time. He knew Lord Stanford then by the name of Lord Stanford. He saw Lord Aylesford [illegible] Lord Stanford before and after the elderly lady. It was arranged that the child should be registered as a child whose birth it was desired to have concealed—that is to say, as the legitimate child, as the son of a lady who was married. He was present at the registration. The French law required that in such a case the mother should be present, and that the father should be represented. Lady Aylesford wished to secure the interests of the child. Lord Stanford wished to secure his interests, and also thought it should be represented, to insure the child by some one else in Paris. Lord Stanford gave his friend, Sherrard Owen, power to act for him. Witness knew Lord Stanford was dead. He knew Lord Aylesford wished to secure the interests of the child. Lord Aylesford never accepted Owen to see the child in Paris.

THE CHICAGO PRESS STORY.

[The Tribune prize of $5 has been awarded this week to the author of the story printed below.

The conditions on which the prize may be won, repeated for use: (1) That the story shall be not less than one nor more than two columns in length; (2) that it shall be written only on one side of the paper; (3) that the name and address of the author shall be written plainly on the first page; and (4) that postage shall be inclosed for the return if not published.

Under an announcement of this character we cannot undertake to keep rejected manuscripts "until called for," as "hold over for" but all manuscripts will be stamped and postage inclosed to wait if preferred to be returned.

A week for $5 will be quoted to the successful competitor; therefore letters or manuscripts from the publishers of the press.]

A Princess of the Blood Royal.

England had furnished Ireland a new Princess by its merry way to capture will, and he and his disposing purpose were passing slowly through the city on their way to Dublin Castle.

The secret that the crowds was divided into two parts, forming a story and perfect contrast. There was a tall, well-dressed, middle-aged gentleman, whose line of faith or worship or one of Leonard beats our with their ribbons, been surrounded the procession as it moved on, waved caps and handkerchiefs, and raised shouts of welcome. There was another person who noticeably fell away from this, and, leaving carriages, flagged the crowding, a ragged, child, disconsolate and, forsaken of the kings of the people, who valued no shouts, they viewed the scene with the active hand that a magnificent royal hands on its visions.

"Kathleen," said one of these latter, looking down on the girl by his side with a smile of indulgent humor and pathos, "why don't ye either bring me cup of a shawl and keep shouting with the best of 'em?"

The girl looked up with a sudden flash of the diamond her humble face. "I'll see more to," she said, "rather be like me than the Queen of Ireland. Why, why should I? It's the good-natured of the O'Briens that rose in me veins, more, an' it's a Princess myself I'm after be the."

"Ah! it's the most solid blood of the O'Neills that runs in mine, to be sure," he replied, "and I'm a Prince myself, by the same token."

He had on a broadcloth hat, ragged trousers, a coat that was in spreads and which had not, doubtless, been made for somebody else, for it hung like a jag about him. But that made little difference with his dignity. His head, with its proud and manly features, was as high as the best of them, and his eyes were as bright as the brightest. They looked at once, other and laughter. For it was absurd but true to John, too, to think, some day, before we knew it would, have loved characteristic of one of the most illustrious Princes of their race[illegible] race.

They had been long waiting for the procession to pass the point where they were standing, and it was now close upon them. The line of the men were, on the rude misery along, leaving right and left, the dissolved fell upon them for a moment, and as the young man, turning from the girl, looked straight into it, gloomy vestige of color was struck out of his face, great drops of perspiration stood upon his brow, and he turn about with confusion. "What a sentiment were upon the elegant arbor-crest, and a look terrible to see, he grasped the girl's arm like a vise.

"Kathleen, Kathleen," he said, in a hoarse, suppressed voice, hardly above a whisper, "it's not the time that not the evening. It's [illegible], me bloody, murderin' thief of a villain that lured your handsome sister from us and her to her home."

Frightened by an emotion so strong as his own, the girl did not hear him, did not even hear him for those gray eyes for her own. Unknown of all else she saw looking into the handsome face save of a young soldier of the guard, who was passing near her. Her evangelic face, lighted as was countenance by the great love she bore him, but hardly a semblance of its usual look. The man's own blurred duty, and rage, patriotic, and dreams were painted on his astonishing features, while the flame took fluctuant and tempered. It was contempt as that an irrepressible hand spread this mark. The young woman's heart had given over to him girl, who by his fair promise to love, to cherish, and protect hopeless fate, [illegible] had turned her heart to the stranger.

"Kathleen," he cried again, shaking her roughly in his arms, "girl, do you hear me?"

The procession had moved on and the young soldier with them. The girl turned with dizzy, weary breath. "I'm not hearing me now, Dennis," she said, and the first time from her gray eyes it. But he did not mind his [illegible].

"Do you see the man that passed us just now?" he questioned fiercely. The girl hesitated, a red color burst her cheeks. "I'm the Princess I am speaking," he pointed, his voice doesn't soften even to his friend. "I'm Princess, by the [illegible] of which you are born, and I'm a prisoner and before the Princess of Wales, and I'm a Princess myself, by the same token. I'm a Princess myself, I tell you, and I'll be one, if I have to [illegible] for it. And I'll not have you [illegible] Princess of Wales. Do you understand, girl? Do you understand?"

"Dennis, my poor Dennis," she answered, in the same voice as then and [illegible] with tears, "I'm not [illegible] Princess of Wales. I'm not [illegible] Princess of Wales. I'm not [illegible] Princess of Wales.
